1 Wal-Mart said earnings per share would decline as much as 12 percent next fiscal year due to investment in technology, higher wages and lower prices, sending its shares down more than 8 percent. Bent Water Brewing Co. co-founders Aaron Reames, right, and Chris Crawford in the Lynn location, which will soon be home to their brewery. NICHOLAS CHARNECKI

Bent Water Brewery hopes to put Lynn on the craft-beer map

Lynn is about to get a craft brewery that ferments in concrete brewing tanks.

NATE HOMAN
@MetroBOS
nate.homan@metro.us

Boston's dirty water was not going to cut it for Bent Water Brewery. That's why its founders headed a few miles north to Lynn, where the water is, apparently, fresher than its reputation.

For Aaron Reames, pouring his heart into Bent Water Brewing Co. is "a hobby on steroids." Once his fraternity brother opened Switchback Brewery in Vermont, he knew it was time to tap into the craft-beer world.

Reames began brewing his own beer in 2007 and decided to go bigger once he saw the advantages his bio-studies background gave him. Now, he plans to take his potion production from the basement into the big time, joining more than 60 breweries in Massachusetts.

"You might think that seeing how people have been brewing beer or something like it for over 2,000 years, we might have found every way to make beer," Reames said.

"But on a chemistry

"I am an optimist who can see a shiny dollar in a dirty nickel."

Reames

level, that is not the case at all. In fact, the field is pretty much wide open."

Having studied molecular genetics at Ohio University, he knew the key to the best brew was in the water source. His pursuit of water purity combined with the need for an ideal location to brew led him to the old industrial center.

"They pull water from three lakes, and it's very clean," Reames said. "They don't have to add any chloramine, which is the really toxic stuff that will kill just about anything. So technically, we don't even have to run the water through carbon filters.

"We do everything right. When you analyze the water quality here, we see that this is prime water to brew with," he said.

The site is under construction, but the vision is in place.

Bent Water Brewing Co. in Lynn will use water from the Lynn Reservoir to make its beers.

"All of us who are on board with Bent Water see great things happening in the future of Lynn," Reames, who lives in Swampscott, said. "I am an optimist who can see a shiny dollar in a dirty nickel in the first place, but with Lynn, you're already seeing a revitalization of a city with an ideal proximity to Boston. We're excited to be a part of it."

Bent Water will aim to brew as many as 12,000 barrels a year, focusing heavily on its extra pale IPA and IPA as its flagship, plus a rotating series of seasonal brews. It will have a tap room, an open beer garden and a staff of 12 to 20. And Bent Water will be the first brewery east of the Mississippi River to use concrete vinther tanks.

"The concrete tanks are commonly used in Sonoma," Reames said. "The molecular properties in this specific style of concrete augment the yeast fermentation and create a very smooth, almost Merlot-style taste."

Head brewer John Strom is in Munich studying at the World Brewing Academy before heading back to the States to take over the production. Reames, who is the primary investor, will be more of a weekend warrior in the process.

"I'm not hanging up the day job," Reames, whose 9-to-5 is in financial services, said. "But instead of going out and buying a sports car or something like that, I decided I wanted to invest in brewing beer."

Bent Water expects to open its doors and brew for the public in January.

All-E-ZPass Mass. coming down the Pike

Ah, the E-ZPass. That little white box that lets you roll right through toll booths without having to dig for change.

Convenience for commuters, yes. Perennial problem for procrastinators, definitely.

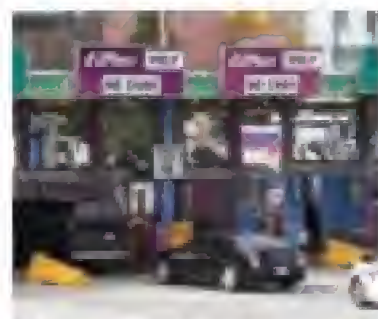

Massachusetts is moving ever closer to a full E-ZPass conversion, with the goal of getting every driver in the state off the cash-pay method for good. Email list subscribers got another reminder in their inboxes this week: "Know anyone still using cash? Encourage them to ... join E-ZPass to save time and money."

Millions have made the switch, according to MassDOT. As of August, 2015, there were 2.51 million E-ZPasses on the road, up from 2.26 million in 2014, according to a spokeswoman for the Massachusetts Department of Transportation. But as the consistent lines in cash-only lanes prove, there are still many who haven't gotten theirs.

Dom Capossela, 73, said he's had his E-ZPass for years.

"I got mine as soon as it came out because it was handy," the Boston resident told Metro. "When you use it it's really sweet to pass the long line of cash customers and go on your way." SPENCER BUELL

BRIEF

Man commits "lewd act" at Cambridge church altar: police
Cambridge police are on the hunt for a man who allegedly broke into a church, dressed himself in a priest's robe, and apparently masturbated on the altar.

Investigators on Wednesday released grainy surveillance images of the suspect, who allegedly defiled the religious shrine at 3:15 a.m. on Sept. 29, at St. Sava Serbian Church.

The suspect allegedly entered through an unlocked door, police said.

"Once inside, the suspect put on the priests clothing and committed a lewd act on the altar of the church," investigators said in a statement on Mass Most Wanted.

The church has security cameras and has the incident recorded, police said.

The man is described as a white male, in his 20s, with glasses. Tips can be sent to the Cambridge Police Department at 617-349-9390. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Ex-NBA star Lamar Odom reported in critical condition

It was the latest episode in Odom's roller-coaster personal and professional life.

Lamar Odom, a former professional basketball player and reality TV star, was reported to be fighting for his life in a Las Vegas hospital on Wednesday after he was found unresponsive at a legal brothel.

The 35-year-old former Los Angeles Lakers standout and ex-husband of Khloe Kardashian suffered a medical emergency on Tuesday at the Love Ranch brothel in Crystal, Nevada, and was taken to the hospital, the Nye County Sheriff's Office said.

Sunrise Hospital & Medical Center, where Odom was taken, declined to comment on Odom's condition, citing patient confidentiality.

But celebrity website TMZ.com cited unidentified sources as saying Odom was in a coma and that some of his organs were failing.

Another outlet, E!, also cited unnamed sources in reporting that Odom suffered brain damage and at least one stroke, and was on a ventilator after taking multiple drugs. The E! cable TV channel airs the reality show "Keeping Up with the Kardashians."

The brothel's owner, Dennis Hof, said that, during his three-day stay, Odom had been taking large amounts of "herbal Viagra," a nonprescription product which can dramatically lower blood pressure and interact with other medications.

Khloe Kardashian, whose whirlwind romance with Odom was captured in "Keeping Up with the Kardashians" and its spin-off, "Khloe and Lamar," was at his bedside, TMZ and Us Weekly reported.

The couple split in 2013 after four years of marriage and their divorce was finalized in

Lamar Odom GETTY IMAGES

"I have been praying all morning for my good friend and Laker great, Lamar Odom, that God will bless him to pull through."

Magie Johnson

July, though she has remained in close contact with him.

Odom publicist Eve Sarkisyan said in a statement that "family and friends are extremely concerned for Lamar" but warned against "false information being circulated unofficially."

Odom's hospitalization followed a downturn in a 14-season career with National Basketball Association teams, including the Lakers from 2004-2011.

On top of the pressures of the life of a top NBA player, Odom, whose mother died when he was 12, had to deal with being a reality TV star after marrying Kardashian.

The 6-foot-10 athlete has long been reported to have had issues with cocaine abuse, although this has never been publicly confirmed. He has admitted only to using marijuana.

During the 2000-2001 season, Odom was suspended for violating the NBA's antidrug policy. In 2013, he pleaded no contest in Los Angeles to a charge of driving under the influence and was ordered to undergo rehabilitation for three months for alcohol abuse. REUTERS

Twitter takes Google exec Kordestani for chairman

Kordestani's extensive sales experience could prove a good counterpoint to Twitter co-founder Dorsey's product knowledge and vision, analysts said.

Twitter lured Google executive Omid Kordestani to become the social media company's executive chairman, the latest step in the company's turnaround efforts under Jack Dorsey, who last week was named permanent CEO.

Kordestani's extensive sales experience could prove a good counterpoint to Twitter co-founder Dorsey's product knowledge and vision, analysts said.

"It's rare you get to be at a company with an amazing business that's also transforming the world," Kordestani tweeted. "I've had good fortune to be at three: Netscape, @google, and now @twitter."

Kordestani, most recently senior adviser at Google, will join Twitter's board and will have an operational role at the company, a Twitter spokeswoman said. That will include help with board and employee recruiting and advising executive leadership.

Twitter said last week it would hire an outsider as chairman to allay concerns about Dorsey's dual role as head of mobile payments company Square Inc, which is reportedly planning an IPO.

"It's quite a coup," said James Cordwell, analyst at Atlantic Equities. "He was very well-respected at Google."

Twitter shares, which are down 18 percent this year, were up about 1 percent in afternoon trading.

The announcement could lead to other changes to the board, long criticized for having too many former Twitter CEOs, an excess that investors and analysts said had hampered the company's ability to attract executives and high-level employees.

Kordestani, 51, joined Google as its 11th employee in 1999 and stayed for 10 years. After a few years away, he returned full-time in October 2014 as chief business officer. REUTERS

Netflix adds fewer US subscribers than forecast; shares fall

Video-streaming service provider Netflix Inc. reported U.S. subscriber additions below its own forecast, which the company attributed to the ongoing transition to chip-based credit and debit cards.

Shares of Netflix, known for its original shows such as "House of Cards" and "Orange Is the New Black," plunged about 15 percent to $93.55 after the bell.

The company said on Wednesday it added 0.88 million U.S. subscribers in the third quarter ended Sept. 30, compared with its forecast of 1.15 million.

"Our overforecast in the U.S. for Q3 was due to slightly higher-than-expected involuntary churn [inability to collect], which we believe was driven in part by the ongoing transition to chip-based credit and debit cards," the company said.

Internationally, Netflix added 2.74 million subscribers, compared with its projection of 2.40 million.

Netflix has been aggressively building its overseas presence as its key U.S. market matures.

The company said revenue rose to $1.74 billion from $1.64 billion a year earlier.

Netflix forecast adding about 1.65 million customers in the United States in the current quarter. It also said it expected to add about 3.50 million subscribers worldwide. REUTERS

Clinton's showing may dampen calls for Biden to run

At times, Clinton seemed to be reaching out both to the progressives in her party more likely to back Sanders and the moderates who may prefer Biden.

Vice President Joe Biden faced an altered political dynamic Wednesday after Hillary Clinton reasserted her command of the Democratic Party presidential race during a debate that may have left little room for him to run.

Analysts widely hailed Clinton, 67, as turning in a nimble, effective performance Tuesday night, perhaps easing the fears of some Democrats fretting that the flap over her use of a private email server while in the Obama administration was torpedoing her candidacy for the 2016 election.

In doing so, she may have dampened calls for Biden to make a belated entrance into the race while also blunting the threat from insurgent candidate Bernie Sanders, the 74-year-old senator from Vermont and self-described democratic socialist.

"If you're a Hillary supporter and you were worried for whatever reason, you should feel very good about yourself," said Rodell Mollineau, a Democratic strategist who attended the televised debate in Las Vegas.

Sanders, Clinton's top rival among declared candidates, was handed the opportunity by debate moderators to assail her over the email issue. Instead, he dismissed the controversy as trivial, drawing an ovation from the crowd and shoving the spotlight away from Clinton's most profound political weakness.

For Biden, 72, who continues to ponder a bid for the presidency, the evening served as a reminder of how tenacious Clinton can be as a candidate, steeled by scores of debates in her 2008 presidential run and four years as secretary of state.

She went toe-to-toe with Sanders over gun control, addressed income inequality and advocated for more liberal family-leave policies.

At the same time, she refused to go along with Sanders' call to break up Wall Street banks, reiterated her support of the Patriot Act and said she would not hesitate to use military force if necessary.

At times, Clinton obliquely criticized President Barack Obama's White House and, by proxy, Biden, for failing to stand up to Russian President Vladimir Putin and for doing too little about the civil war in Syria.

Biden mentioned the debate in remarks to reporters Wednesday but gave no indication of whether he will enter the race.

"I thought every one of those folks last night ... I thought they all did well," he said after a speech in Washington about transportation investment.

REUTERS

"This is the kind of debate that helps build momentum."

Heidi Klum is a self-professed Mr. Mom

Heidi Klum is opening up about life as a single mom some four years after her divorce from Seal, and you know what? Things aren't really that different. "Obviously things have changed, but they haven't changed drastically," she tells Redbook. "He was never your typical dad who left for work in the morning with his briefcase and would be home by dinner time every night. He traveled a lot. The kids knew it was part of his job. I'm a mom and a dad at the same time."

Emilia Clarke, your sexiest woman alive

Dragons or no dragons, Esquire magazine officially dubs Daenerys Targaryen the fairest in the five kingdoms. Or rather, the mag has dubbed "Game of Thrones" star Emilia Clarke the sexiest woman alive. Take that, all other living women! And while the magazine is focusing on her looks, Clarke reveals how she prepped for her audition for "Game of Thrones," despite not really fitting the part that would eventually make her a star. "My agent told the casting director, 'I know that the breakdown for this character is tall and willowy and blonde. I know she's short and round and brown, but I'd like you to see her,'" Clarke explains. "I had two scenes which told me nothing and not very much time in which to read all those books. So I did what every good actor does and Wikipedia'd the living crap out of it."

Lil Wayne gets ahead of himself on Lamar Odom's demise

When news broke that Lamar Odom was found unconscious in a Nevada brothel, plenty of famous folks started sending best wishes and hopes for a speedy recovery. Except for Lil Wayne. The rapper — who may have just misheard what was going on — jumped straight into mourning the loss of the retired NBA player and former Kardashian-adjacent reality star. Wednesday morning, while Khloe Kardashian and Kobe Bryant were rushing to Odom's bedside, Weezy tweeted, "R.I.P. LO. Damn man. My blessings to ur fam and friends." An embarrassing gaffe, to be sure. Except Wayne isn't really one for embarrassment. He tweeted a follow-up, simply stating, "Woop," but he didn't take the original tweet down. But maybe — and hear me out here — Lil Wayne actually knows something we don't. Maybe he's secretly from the future. It would explain so much! Then again, he did say R.I.P. "Lo." Has anyone checked on Lindsay Lohan lately?

Want to go to a naked Miley Cyrus concert?

Want to see Miley Cyrus — and the Flaming Lips — performing totally naked? First off, that's an oddly specific fantasy. And second, you're in luck! But there's a catch: You have to be naked, too. Along with the rest of the audience. "Oh f—! [Cyrus] is planning a show where her, the band (us) and the audience are all completely naked with milk — well, white stuff that looks like milk — being spewed everywhere," Flaming Lips ringleader Wayne Coyne spilled on Instagram. "It's a video (in the works) for ['Miley and Her Dead Pets'] song 'The Milky Milky Milk.'" This sounds ... less than sanitary. And like a legal nightmare.

Gender equality in 'Star Wars'

Remember back during Star Wars Celebration when the new film's first teaser was released? When Kathleen Kennedy talked about how important it was to her that there were more women in the "Star Wars" universe? That moment had me standing and applauding along with thousands of other women in the audience and around the world. Princess Leia was a groundbreaking character, but she was largely alone in terms of her sex. The prequels didn't really do much better, with a single lead female, a few handmaidens and a female on the Jedi council who didn't really speak. The prospect of my beloved franchise with more women sounded amazing.

When the original casting announcement came out for "The Force Awakens," the single female actor caused a backlash, but since then we've seen announcements for quite a number of female cast members, including Captain Phasma (Gwendoline Christie), a military leader. We know that "Star Wars Anthology: Rogue One" has a number of female characters, including the lead. It looks like the promise is being kept.

What actually makes me more excited is that this promise is part of the new canon's extended universe as well. In "Star Wars Rebels," which is canon, we not only got the return of "The Clone Wars" star Ahsoka Tano, but we have Hera and Sabine, the pilot and the warrior whose origins will be revealed in depth in Season 2.

Where I've seen it done best is in the books,

"Moving Target," "Lost Stars" and "Aftermath." These books finally — finally — give us the 50/50 split between male and female characters that not even our modern-day TV shows and films can manage. It's like there is an even gender split in real life or something! Imagine that!

Even better? In those books, women are equally represented as people in power, rogues, characters both strong and weak, bounty hunters, government officials, military commanders. There is even a mention of gender reassignment. No one seems to have any issue with women in power. The issues people have are with each person as an individual. It's almost jarring in its unfamiliarity.

It's been said many times that it's always easiest to tackle issues in the world through science fiction before it is in reality. Thank you, "Star Wars," for taking this on.

Amy Ryan will do anything for Spielberg

The Oscar nominee talks "Bridge of Spies" — and her bit part in "War of the Worlds."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Amy Ryan is a serious and brilliant actress, but the Oscar nominee slips right into lighter fare, too. She was Michael Scott's endearingly dorky object of affection over a good stretch of "The Office," and the same week that her new Steven Spielberg drama "Bridge of Spies" comes out, she pops up in "Goosebumps." In "Bridge of Spies," though, she's straight-faced, playing Mary, the wife of Tom Hanks' Cold War-era lawyer defending a Soviet spy (Mark Rylance).

This is not your first Spielberg. You were in "War of the Worlds" as "Neighbor with Toddler." [Laughs] "Yeah, Steven, why didn't you name me?" "You're going to die before the credits start." [On "Bridge of Spies"], it was nice to sit with him in an intimate family setting, talking about human behavior and try to create an active, living household with 12 things going on at once.

In Steven Spielberg's "Bridge of Spies," in theaters Friday, Amy Ryan plays the worried wife of Tom Hanks' James B. Donovan, a lawyer defending a hated Soviet spy (Mark Rylance). JAP DUTENDIUK

Your role in "Bridge of Spies" is also not huge.

They said, "This is not a very big part, but it's an important part." "Yes, of course I want to make a movie with you. Why would I say no?" [Laughs]

You could have bragging rights as the one who turned down Spielberg. Maybe someone else did that before they called me. [Laughs] Maybe they're cool. I don't need to be cool.

What was he like, now that you really got a chance to work with him?

Even though I did have a small part in "War of the Worlds," Steven really did direct me. He takes time with the details, whether it's a small part or the lead character. It's not like some second A.D. coming over there and saying, "You have to stand to the left." He's all about creating human behavior and overlapping dialogue. The scenes aren't just about coverage. They're about a character's point of view. The scene where we exit the courthouse, even though I had no lines he says, "It's about Mary. This is the first time she's out in the public eye. The public is encroaching on her life. She's terrified."

He has the flashes going off in my face and the crowd is coming in, and this ups Mary's protest, that she thinks he shouldn't take the case. Her family is in danger. But she knew there was a greater good. She was just fiercely protective of their family, like any good, sane mother would be.

For the kids

I did want to ask, lastly, about the two children's films you have on the docket. You're in "Goosebumps" and "Monster Trucks." Was that just a coincidence or were you actively looking for stuff that was for a younger audience?

I have a kid. My kid can't see either of these films because she's too young. But it's nice that my nieces can finally see something that I've done. [Laughs]

They're usually just watching "Gone Baby Gone."

Yeah, they have that on a loop in the house.

Leon Bridges goes all in

The much-talked-about newcomer brings '60s soul back with "Coming Home."

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

A couple years ago, soul singer Leon Bridges was working as a dishwasher in Texas. Now, he's selling out concerts across the U.S., and his first album, "Coming Home" debuted at No. 1 on Billboard's R&B/Hip-Hop Album charts this past summer. Comparisons to Otis Redding and Sam Cooke are inevitable with Bridge's throwback '60s musical style, but he brings his own hip-hop flare to the table, making his music stand out.

Going all in Bridges' father introduced him to musicians like the ones he's so often compared to today. "My dad was always keeping up with black history," Bridges says. But he adds that it wasn't until he was older and getting into soul music that he really started giving them a close listen.

Bridges tells us he was "definitely nervous" to go full-on retro on his album. "I didn't know if I could do it because I came from a hip-hop and modern R&B background," he says. "I could have gone the way of using just bits and pieces, but I really wanted to go all the way in. I was so in love with the music, but of course it's going to come out my own way."

Community college and coffeehouses

It wasn't too long ago that Bridges played his first show at his community college in Texas. "One of my friends played the piano and we sang some cover songs," he says. "I was nervous but also so excited because it was my first time playing in front of people."

The 26-year-old taught himself guitar, first by watching YouTube videos and then asking some of his friends, who already knew how to play. "There was an open mic at this coffee shop I went to and I had a lot of friends who were guitar players there," he says.

"They showed me a lot of things. ... But over the years, I developed this certain style, and it's very sloppy, but it's a great tool to write songs."

Keeping it loose

Part of what gives "Coming Home" its raw, authentic sound is the way it was recorded. "We recorded it in this building that was basically a lot of different businesses and lofts, and it had a bar," Bridges describes. "So when people walked in, they would hear us recording."

He says some of what's on the album wasn't rehearsed at all, it just came to him on the fly. "Basically what you hear on 'Coming Home' is when I was playing acoustic guitar around town. There were certain things that came out of nowhere."

New Outlook on a nightlife hot spot

Outlook Kitchen and Bar is boutique hotel bar where everybody knows your name.

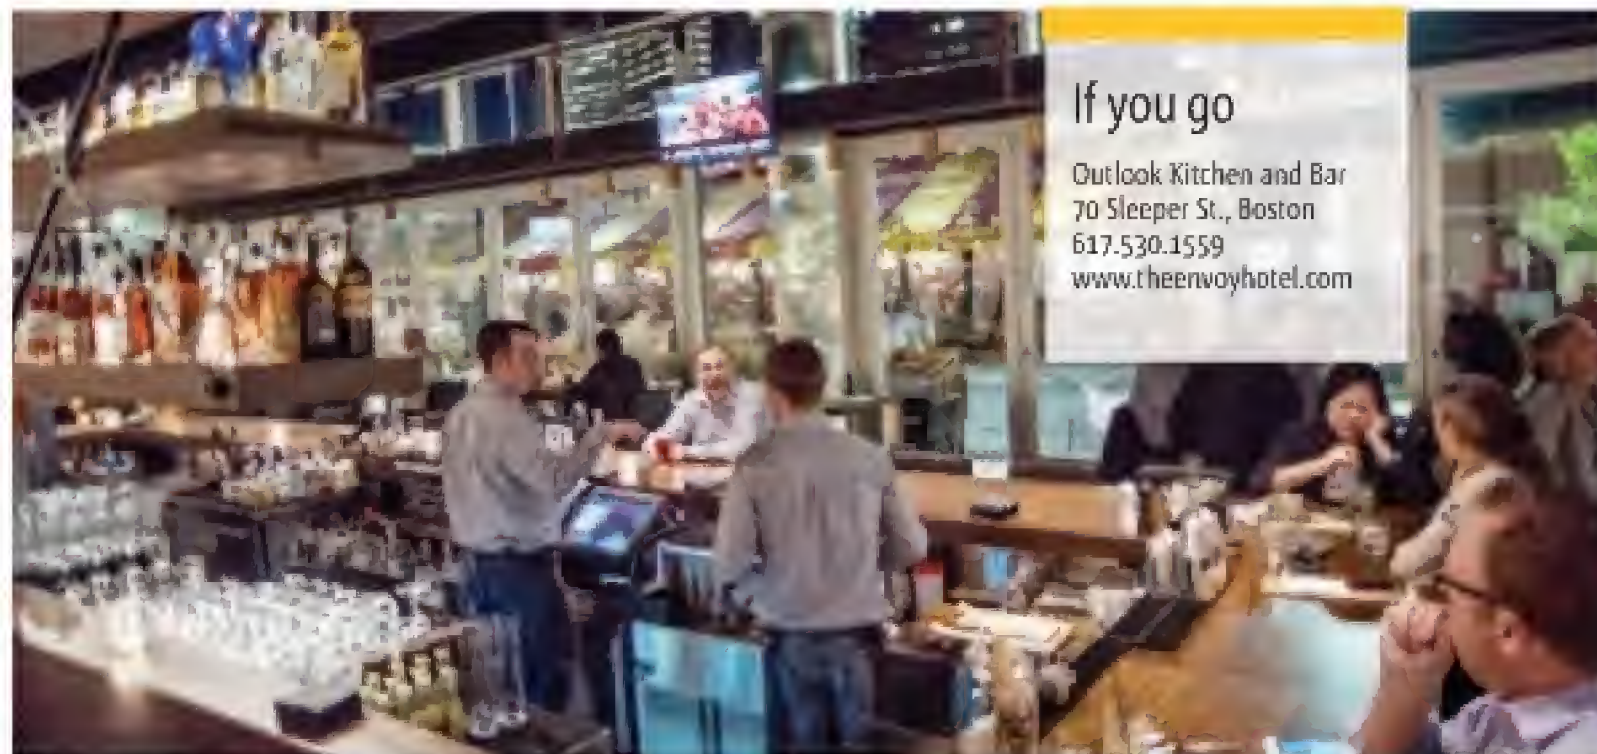

LUKE O'NEIL
@lukeoneil47
letters@metro.us

It seems a shame to be delivering this news to you midway through October, just as it's about to taper off for the season, but if you haven't been to the Lookout Rooftop Bar at the Envoy Hotel in the Seaport, you've been missing out on the best bar view in the city. But fear not, because the hotel's second drinking destination has launched. Here's what you need to know.

The look

Outlook Kitchen and Bar's views may not be quite as captivating, but it's an interesting space on its own, with salvaged ship wood, dangling rope accents and large glass panels overlooking the dock and the iconic Barking Crab next door.

The shelves of spirits inside the 28-seat bar is an abstract view of the swing bridge outside, says manager Michael Ray. If you look hard enough you'll see it — though a couple cocktails might help.

"When we opened up upstairs on the roof, the whole vision was going to be cocktail lounge, a great view of the city — the best view of the city, actually. There was no vision of it being a crazy hot spot, [with] nightclub-esque kind of activity," he says.

The drinks

Ray's quick to admit they're not trying to compete on the same conceptual level as Drink or Tavern Road or other friends around the neighborhood, "but just trying to complement them."

The results on the cocktail side "are less spirit-forward, but not too generic that someone's like, 'They don't care about the program here.'"

Part of the unique touch comes in using almost all locally-based spirits on their cocktail menu — Wire Works gin, Bully Boy vodka, South Boston Irish whiskey, Berkshire Mountain Ethereal gin and Privateer Amber rum, for example. Outlook's also been working with the Harpoon Brewery down the street on its own brew.

Must try

The cocktail menu is divided by spirits to make it more "user-friendly," Ray says. The best I tried was The Common Habits, made with Wire Works gin, Carpano Antica, Campari, orange bitters and Green Chartreuse — from whose famed monk-distilled tradition it takes its name.

Elsewhere the Juliet and Romeo — so named because "it's always ladies first here," Ray says — is another fine gin cocktail, using the Wire Works Gin with mint, cucumber and rose water.

Basque in glory in northern Spain

The cities of northern Spain have much to offer tourists in terms of art, culture, history and, of course, traditional Basque cuisine.

You'd be forgiven for thinking that the only thing that ever happens in Pamplona is the running of the bulls through the streets during the weeklong Festival of San Fermin each July. But Pamplona is one of several exciting cities in the northeast corner of Spain that have just as much to offer as the better known southern cities.

San Sebastian, an easy hour's drive north of Pamplona, is one of the most popular holiday resorts for Spaniards but is less known to visitors from overseas. In 2016, that will change when San Sebastian becomes a European Capital of Culture, alerting the outside world to its many attractions. Beyond its wonderful beach curving around the Bahia de La Concha is the historic Old Town with ancient churches and the Museo San Telmo (Santelmomuseoa.com). If you want to find out about the Basque culture of this part of Spain, this museum, set in an old monastery, is an absorbing delight.

An hour west along the coast is Bilbao, the largest Basque city, with its wealth of museums. The most notable is the Guggenheim Museum Bilbao (Guggenheim-bilbao.es/en), looking just as futuristic and striking now as it did when it opened in 1997. It concentrates on modern art with work by artists including Willem de Kooning, Mark Rothko and Jeff Koons, but it also displays the work of Basque artists. Notable too is the Bilbao Fine Arts Museum, dating from 1908, with works from Goya, El Greco, Gauguin, Cezanne, Francis Bacon and more.

A two-hour drive through the dramatic mountainous Parque Natural Aizkorri-Aratz takes you back to Pamplona, capital of the Navarre region. Founded in Roman times, it is as bustling and buzzing as any modern Spanish city, with cafes and tapas bars serving Basque food. It has medieval walls, a vast main plaza, an impressive Gothic cathedral, a fascinating old town, and churches and museums, including the must-see Museo de Navarra. Avoid the bulls, and feast instead on the culture.

European Capitals of Culture

In 1983, Melina Mercouri, a Greek minister of culture and former actress, came up with the idea of designating one European city to be the City of Culture each year. Now they're called Capitals of Culture, and two cities share the honor. Start planning your travels, as the cities put on their best face with new museums, special exhibitions and one-off events.

2015 It's not too late to visit Mons in Belgium or Pilsen in the Czech Republic (known for the beer Pilsner Urquell).

2016 Sharing duties with San Sebastian will be Wrocław in Poland, recently voted one of the world's best cities to live in.

2017 The Cultural Capitals will be Denmark's second city, Aarhus, and Paphos on the Mediterranean island of Cyprus.

Come here for more noshes and wine, by the glass or in slushies. The music is from local favorite Phil Dumond, who's opened for the likes of Willie Nelson and Buffalo Springfield. If you overimbibe, no problem: Buttonwood Grove has onsite accommodations.

NOT DRAFTED? NO PROBLEM

Talent is our top priority when drafting our season-long teams. If we just chase opportunity, we end with #regrets like Davante Adams and C.J. Anderson.

But now that we're six weeks into the season, we start looking more at opportunity when prioritizing transactions. The talented guys aren't available, and big volume with mediocre talent can work well. We also now know which teams are going to be playing from behind a majority of the time, which often bodes well for certain kinds of players.

So ignore the undrafted stigma and hop on board with these relative unknowns:

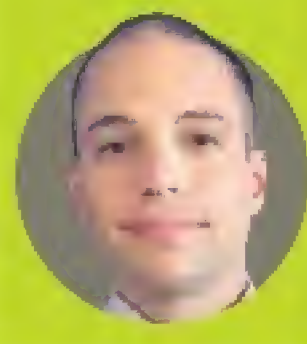

The need for Snead

Willie Snead wasn't even supposed to make the Saints' final roster coming out of camp. Now he's their No. 1 receiver. It's not because of injury, it's because he's earned it with reliably excellent play for four straight months. With Brandin Cooks getting exposed as a complementary player, Marques Colston toast/hurt and Brandon Coleman disappointing, Snead is Drew Brees' go-to guy. Although this pass game isn't what it once was, that's still a big role. Willie should be penned into lineups going forward.

Go West, young man

Charcandrick West out-snapped Knile Davis 18-4 following Jamaal Charles' knee injury in Week 5. West also ran circles around Davis in the preseason, winning the backup job and holding it through the first month of the season. The Chiefs worked out free agents Ben Tate, Pierre Thomas and Bryce Brown this week, but didn't sign any of them. It's another vote of confidence in West, who plays well in the pass game — a crucial tool for Andy Reid as evidenced by the likes of Charles and Brian Westbrook. Don't be afraid to blow 70-80 percent of your FAAB budget on West.

Mr. Wilson's neighborhood

Marquess Wilson is the real deal. Finally adding bulk to his 6-foot-4 frame, he's recorded a 12-165-1 line over the last two weeks while Alshon Jeffery (calf) has sat out. Even when Jeffery returns, Wilson has significant appeal in this mess of a Bears season. Expect plenty of three-wide sets, with Wilson as the downfield target and Eddie Royal underneath. The Bears must develop their young talent.

NFL news

It's not always true that a wide receiver is only as good as his quarterback. DeAndre Hopkins is a beast in spite of Ryan Mallett and Brian Hoyer. Allen Robinson is going to eat even with Blake Bortles. But sometimes, the quarterback play is so inept that it kills even the best wideouts. That's the case with Antonio Brown, as Mike Vick can no longer complete a simple screen or slant accurately. All he can do is use his still-big arm to chuck it deep, but that's not Brown's game. Don't be afraid to sit him Sunday.

Charcandrick West is getting the brunt of the carries in Kansas City these days. / GETTY IMAGES

Week 6 studs

A look at players who you should add to your roster this week:

Christine Michael, RB, Cowboys — Dallas is reportedly considering starting C-Mike over Joseph Randle following their bye.

Gary Barnidge, TE, Browns — Flew under the radar for far too long. Actually a very good athlete in a pass-happy offense.

Golden Tate, WR, Lions — It's an ideal spot for the dormant Lions offense to break out against the Bears and get Tate his first TD of the year.

John Brown, WR, Cardinals — Expect Brown to set a new season-high for yards as Carson Palmer shreds the talent-deficient Steelers secondary this week.

Kamar Aiken, WR, Ravens — It's the second straight week on this list for Aiken, who gets an even better matchup this time around, against the #9ers.
